

SHE GOT LOVE POWDERS

They Cost Sixty Dollars But Weren't Worth It.

SPIRITS THAT HAVE FLED

One Lady Got a Prescription to Knock the Spots Off Her Liver—Medium Miles Grant Has Vamoosed.

BUTTE, June 30.—Miss Grant, alias Harry Waite, the spiritualistic high priest, and evidently the greatest fakir of them all, is missing. He is a minus quantity, has absconded himself, vamoosed, and the circles that knew him in Butte know him no more. Mr. Grant-Waite was doing too well in this city; in fact, just before he left so suddenly, he gave it as his opinion that there are more suckers to the square inch in Butte than any town he had ever struck. In a town where people buy love powders, amulets and charms, in which articles Grant-Waite carried on a heavy business, that class of fish, he thinks, must swim in unusually large schools. But it was his business in this line that finally caused him to leave Butte.

A well-known married lady of this city, and Waite didn't hesitate to give her name, applied to the young fellow for advice. She wanted to win a man's love, but whether it was that or her husband she did not say. All her charms had availed nothing, and she was bent on employing fair means or foul.

The little high priest could fix it all right for her. He made a specialty of love powders. Their effect was easy, simple and dead sure. The lady was overjoyed. How much would such a sure-shot powder cost?

Only $60. It was a pretty steep figure for the woman, who didn't have that much by about $54.40, but she could get it and would return in a day or two, and she kept her word and brought the $60 the very next day. She got her powder and used it according to instructions on her victim. It didn't work satisfactorily, so she got more. The result was the same, and she got another installment. The object of her love was fed more harmless powders, but still his love was not forthcoming and the woman began to doubt the efficacy of the powders. She complained to the little high priest and demanded her money back. He told her to be patient and gave her more powder, but the powder refused to work, and the woman threatened to make trouble, and at the earliest way to avoid trouble the little high priest left the city, and doubtless by this time has established himself under a new name in greener fields.

A young woman in Basin wrote to the little high priest that she was in love, but, alas, she had a rival. Her mail was answered with the assurance that everything in love could be made to come her way for an even $40. The $40 came Mr. Grant's way, and by return mail the Basin girl received a curiously wrought and wire-bound amulet, with instructions to wear it between the snowy pure hillocks of her virtuous breast. The deluded damsel is probably wearing the amulet still, and growing shadowy from the gnawing of unrequited love and despair, as she witnesses the affection between her lover and her hated rival growing.

The sporting fraternity of Butte, especially the female portion of it, purchased love powders, charms and amulets in large quantities, and if the married woman first spoken of had not threatened to raise a row, Mr. Grant might have been compelled to build a large factory in Butte for the manufacture of love powders.

Grant-Waite is a pretty shrewd sort of a little high priest in the spiritualistic business. He was too cute to be caught red-handed, so to speak, by a newspaper reporter, and refused to give "sitting" to any one he regarded with any suspicion, and the little fellow was very suspicious. He did, however, give a long and clear exposure of the numerous tricks resorted to by "fakir" mediums as he termed them, but he was emphatic in his declaration that he resorted to no such tricks. But he did, and the very curious thing of it is that he exposed the very tricks he used himself. In order to demonstrate this apparently unimportant and self-evident fact, it was necessary to send the wife of a rancher to interview the "medium," and she did it so well that there is no doubt that in his exposure he exposed himself. His favorite way of getting communications from the spirits is by getting answers to written questions sealed in an envelope. The rancher's wife wrote her questions and sealed them up, but she refused to let the medium have the envelope although he lost his patience to such an extent that he attempted to take it by force. When she found that he couldn't get it he pretended to fall exhausted and declared that the spirits wouldn't work, and that the lady would have to leave the envelope and call again the next day. She took the precaution to make several pin punctures through the envelope and then opened it among a number of similar envelopes on the table. She called the next day for her answer and received a ridiculous lot of replies to questions she had never asked. The medium had gotten hold of the wrong envelope and gave the answers to the wrong woman. His methods of reading the questions in a sealed envelope is by the alcohol trick, explained in the STANDARD a few weeks ago.

Mrs. J. E. Leonard, the "clairvoyant medium" whose peculiar methods occupied a column in the STANDARD a week ago, is out in an interview in a Butte sheet denying statements she had never been accused of making. When a medium rushes into print to explain and defend, he does an indiscreet thing, and especially was Mrs. Leonard indiscreet. She claims to be in a trance when she answers questions and that she knows nothing as to what she says, and yet she comes out in an interview to deny making certain answers to certain questions. Curious, isn't it? She also "brands" as utterly false the assertion that she sells medicine, and yet the spiritualistic scribe of the STANDARD has the names and addresses of an even half dozen persons to whom she offered medicine and prescriptions, and told at least some of them that she prescribed and raised her medicines while in a state of trance, and to one lady she offered medicine for $15 that would take the spots off her liver, and for $5 other stuff that would right some other internal wrong, besides Mrs. Leonard herself admits that it cost her something like a thousand dollars to get out of trouble in Helena, where she "practiced" medicine in the same peculiar manner. As observed before, it is a bad thing to rush into print.

But talking about spiritualists and mediums brings Mrs. Calder to mind, the 250 pound lady who predicted for the STANDARD reporter just three weeks ago to-morrow night, that "within two or three weeks" he would get himself into trouble; that within that time he would be waylaid and assaulted and seriously injured. This most dire prediction of the spirits has not been fulfilled up to the present writing, and unless they mean to make out their weighty medium a base fabricator they will have to get a mighty hustle on themselves within the next 24 hours.

BAD PEOPLE.

The Law Got a Side Held On Some of Them Yesterday.

BUTTE, June 30.—Antonio Gabriani was tried and convicted in Judge Turner's court this morning on the charge of exhibiting a deadly weapon and threatening to kill Mrs. Callistano. Dan Yancy appeared for Gabriani and demanded a jury trial, which he was granted.

The testimony showed that Gabriani and Mrs. Callistano's husband had been partners in the ice business, but did not get along well, so Callistano sold out his interest to Gabriani. The latter afterwards came to the conclusion that he got the worst of the deal and started out to create trouble. He visited Callistano's, and in the presence of R. Campana created a disturbance. Witnesses testified that he tore his hair and clothes and got so excited that he pulled a gun and pointed it first at Mr. Callistano and then at Mrs. Callistano and threatened to kill the whole family of Callistanos. He was disarmed and arrested.

The jury found him guilty as charged and then his attorney filed a motion for arrest of judgment, which will be argued Monday evening. Gabriani was charged with the lightest offense that could be preferred against him, being a misdemeanor, the punishment for which is a fine of $10 to $100 or 30 to 90 days in jail, or both. E. S. Booth prosecuted the case.

Frank Dougherty, the fellow who has been notorious to some extent because of his aversion to work, and his bad reputation as a bold, wicked man who is not afraid of his own shadow, was to have been tried before Judge Turner this afternoon on a state charge of vagrancy. When his case was called he asked for a continuance, which was not granted, and then he pleaded that he did not have an attorney. He was given time to go out and get one and returned with John Lindsay, who filed an affidavit for a change of venue and the trial of the case had to be continued. It makes the third change Dougherty has taken. The first was from Judge Slaughter's court and the second from Judge Coleman's. As soon as Dougherty left Judge Turner's court room, he was arrested again by Chief of Police Leyden on still another charge of vagrancy and he now languishes in the city jail.

Tom Smith demanded a jury trial before Judge Turner on the charge of disturbance. He got it and was convicted and his attorney, J. W. Shannon, filed a motion for arrest of judgment which will be argued Monday night. Charles Mattison appeared for the state in the cases against Dougherty and Smith.

OUR REASONS.

We Make Money By Saving It.

Being frequently asked how it is, and why we are closing out such a fine new stock of Kimball and other makes of pianos at the manufacturers' wholesale cost, and why it is such a worthy concern as the W. W. Kimball Co. are obliged to sell such a fine, fresh sample stock of pianos at a cost, (some even hesitating to believe that there is not at least a small margin of profit on the instruments purchased at this sale), I deem it only just to ourselves, as well as to those who may not have read, or fully understood in our opening announcement, our reasons for disposing of this entire stock of about 130 instruments right here in Butte without asking or expecting a profit, to make such further explanation in regard to this matter as will make our position perfectly plain.

Some 30 days or more ago the Kimball company of Chicago, who are piano manufacturers, and who as general agent I represent, decided that it would be advantageous for their coast trade to have a sample stock of all styles of their new scale Kimball pianos carried here in Butte, as a wholesale branch, or distributing point, from which to supply our agents in this section of country more readily than from Chicago and save them some trouble. But after shipping here some 70 odd pianos for that purpose, we found that Messrs. Orion Brothers' store was too small to carry and display any such stock, and as they were to represent us, and no other store sufficiently large could be had here at this time, we had either to ship the stock back to factory at Chicago, or make a sale and dispose of them at such figures as would dispose of the entire stock in a few days. As I had no time to lose here in trying to sell such a stock at a profit, and realizing that at factory cost on terms of $10 a month they could be disposed of in perhaps less time than we could put them aboard of the cars, I decided to make the sale and thereby save the entire amount of return freight to factory, which would be about $25 each, or on the whole, about $3,500. As money saved is money made, our company is frightened enough to give you these pianos and organs at cost if they could save $3,000 by so doing, besides 130 new Kimball instruments sold in this city at once would be a great advertisement for the New Scale Kimball piano, worth in the future several thousand dollars to us. The sale was announced, and during the week just past more than 30 of our instruments were sold to residents of this city at factory cost. There are some 35 more to dispose of, and then the greatest and fairest piano sale ever made anywhere will have ended. No one who needs a piano or an organ, or even anticipates the purchase of one within the next few years, can afford to let this opportunity pass. It is the one chance of a lifetime.

THIS IS THE FIRST DAY

The Fishing Season Opens In Montana This Morning.

AS TO RODS, LINES AND LIES

The Isaaks' Waitons Will Have to Take Long Journeys on Foot Before They Reach the Desired Spots.

BUTTE, June 30.—The war on the trout will begin to-morrow. The open season for fishing in Montana commences July 1, and no time will be lost by the many local fishermen who have been counting the days and the hours until it would be possible to catch fish without running the chances of being caught in turn by the inspector. A few have taken the chances of rushing the season and eluding the officials, and they report a big crop of fish all ready and anxious to be captured and devoured.

The strike will interfere greatly with the pursuit of the enemy, and the trout in a good many favorite resorts who have been waiting anxiously for July 1 to arrive in order to have a battle with man, are likely to be disappointed. Probably the tributaries of the Big Hole and the Big Hole itself, are visited by more Butte fishermen than any other place, but the Union Pacific tie-up will prevent excursions by rail to this resort. The only way to make a one day's fishing trip to the Big Hole was by the Union Pacific's Sunday fish train last summer, and this will not be put on to-morrow and may not be put on for several weeks.

On the Northern Pacific line also the fish will have a lease of life until the strike is over.

On the Great Northern line, however, the war will be waged relentlessly. At Bernice, in the streams running out of old Lake Wilder, the trout are said to be abundant, and until the other roads are opened up this is likely to be the favorite destination of the fish catchers. The trains in and out of Butte on this line are arranged so as to give a good day's fishing without running a special fish train. The Great Northern morning train leaves Butte at 9 a. m. and reaches Bernice about 10:15 o'clock. After a day in the streams about Bernice, fishermen can leave Bernice at 8 p. m. and reach Butte at 9:15 o'clock.

Another favorite resort is at Race Track on the Montana Union line, about half way to Garrison. The new arrangement obtains on the Montana Union makes it possible to have a good day's sport at Race Track, and a good many will doubtless try their luck at this resort, unless the Montana Union should be involved in the railroad troubles.

The Northern Pacific had arranged for fish trains to go out to its resorts to-morrow, but force of circumstances prevents reaching these resorts except by the STANDARD's special handcar train, on which all available room is engaged for several days ahead.

Brown's gulch, close to Butte, is reached in an hour's ride by team, and a good many Butte fishermen will open the fishing season there, and let the railroads go for the present.

Old fishermen consider the streams too high just now for the best fishing, but will try their luck nevertheless. Fishing is done to the best advantage at this altitude between Aug. 1 and Sept. 15.

The Event of the Season.

Mr. and Mrs. Whitford will give their first grand ball at the Road house on Sunday evening, July 1. A first class time is assured to those that attend. Everybody welcome.
